Woman Thought to Be Implicated in Ending the Career of the Late President Faure, Who Expired at Her Home.

PROTESTED HER INNOCENCE

Paris, Nov. 3 .- Not since 1902, when Frederick and Therese Humbert were convicted of a $12,000,000 swindle, has a trial in Paris excited the intense interest exhibited in the case of Mme. Adolphe Steinheil, which was opened before Judge Devalles in the Seine court today.

Mme. Steinheil is on trial for her life, charged with the murder of her husband and her stepmother, Mme. Japy. The alleged motive is found in the defendant's Chairman of National Prohibition to rid herself of the husband in order that she might marry Maurice Borderel, a wealthy merchant who had become infatuated with her.

The latent attractiveness of the woman, combined with the mystery of her career and her connection with persons high in the public life of France, have fed the popular imagination and led the public to believe the most startling disclosures are imminent.

Judge Devalles received 2,000 applications for seats in the court room, but arbitrarily refused all with the exception of those made for members of the press, the bar and others concerned with the trial.

To this were added the first 100 persons, standing in line this morning, seeking admission to the court room. The law provides for public admission to the trial of any case not neard in camera and the admission of the 100 mentioned met this requirement of the law today.

In the hope of securing one of these coveted places many men and women stood before the court entrance throughout last night and places of vantage commanded as high as $200.
